

Personality Report

These are the results of the test, according to the answers you provided. Please bear in mind that no test is perfect and there is always a margin of error for test scores. Also, there are dimensions of personality that are not assessed in this test, so don't consider these results as an absolute definition of who you are.

Extraversion

Your level of extraversion is most likely higher than the levels of 79% of the population and lower than the levels of 21% of the population

Agreeableness

Your level of agreeableness is most likely higher than the levels of 97% of the population and lower than the levels of 3% of the population

Conscientiousness

Your level of conscientiousness is most likely higher than the levels of 74% of the population and lower than the levels of 26% of the population

Neuroticism

Your level of neuroticism is most likely higher than the levels of 89% of the population and lower than the levels of 11% of the population

Intellect

Your level of intellect is most likely higher than the levels of 89% of the population and lower than the levels of 11% of the population

Interpretation of your scores

Extraversion

Extraversion describes the dimension of personality that distinguishes people who are talkative and socially oriented from those who are reserved and don't talk a lot. This dimension refers to the extent that people are extroverted rather than introverted.

The way you answered the questions indicates that, compared to most people, you describe yourself as someone who doesn't have problems when it comes to socialization. You are good at expressing yourself and tend to feel enthusiastic about things.

Agreeableness

Agreeableness describes the dimension of personality that distinguishes people who are cooperative and helpful from people who are self-interested and unhelpful. This dimension refers to the extent that people give priority to the interests of others rather than their own interests.

The way you answered the questions indicates that, compared to most people, you describe yourself as someone who is extremely considerate of how others think and feel. You go out of your way to help others and enjoy being generous and supportive.

Conscientiousness

Conscientiousness describes the dimension of personality that distinguishes people who are orderly and plan ahead from people who are disorderly and impulsive. This dimension refers to the extent to which people are structured rather than unstructured.

The way you answered the questions indicates that, compared to most people, you describe yourself as someone who is generally persistent and goal-oriented. You enjoy routine and pay attention to details whenever you can.

Neuroticism

Neuroticism describes the dimension of personality that distinguishes people who are cool-headed and calm from people who tend to experience negative emotions such as fear and sadness. This dimension refers to the extent that people are emotionally stable rather than emotionally unstable.

The way you answered the questions indicates that, compared to most people, you describe yourself as someone who frequently worries about many things and can't handle stress. Your reactions to different situations are based on strong emotions and you find it hard to calm yourself.

Intellect

Intellect describes a dimension of personality that distinguishes people who are imaginative and ingenious from people who are traditional and conservative. This dimension refers to the extent to which people prefer innovation over convention.

The way you answered the questions indicates that, compared to most people, you describe yourself as someone with a big intellectual curiosity, very interested in complex ideas, and who uses imagination a lot.

Thank you for completing this personality assessment.